Distracted Drivers

Sherry Smith
Motorist Awareness

Last month was motorist awareness month. With Andy’s accident behind us, it’s a good time to focus on what is before us. GWRRA has a new seminar out called, DISTRACTED DRIVERS! You know them...the cell phone texting/talking, eating/drinking, grooming, dealing with children, pets in their laps (oops J), or just generally allowing their minds anywhere else but on the road.

Distracted Driving, per GWRRA, “is any non-driving activity engaged in that has the potential to distract a driver from the primary task of driving and increase the risk of a crash.” As sometimes drivers ourselves, we should be especially cognitive of these facts, and work to not become one of “those” people.

Be Aware, Be Safe, Be Cognitive of those Distracted Drivers.

Till next time.....

Wind Worn

Submitted by Andrew Smith Rider Educator

As I write this, we are sitting in a hotel in Albuquerque, NM. The trip to the Region "F" Rally was definitely one where we had to face exposure to high winds during our trip down. As many of you have experienced, riding on one edge of your tires will wear you out in short order. So whether you are riding in New Mexico or any place where the winds may give you a challenge, here are a few tips that might make the ride a little more pleasant.

Riding In A Heavy Crosswind

How to keep them upright? With science and skill.

Step One: Batten Down The Hatches

Start with the 70 mph or whatever speed resistance you encounter from the air as your cruise along a road. You know how serious that is and you know how tightly you have to strap things down to your bike and to your body to keep them secure. Side winds exacerbate that problem to a huge degree. So, if you have a tank bag or panniers or a tail pack or a backpack or whatever, try and get it as immobile on the bike as you can possibly make it. Throw a bungee net over the luggage, pull the straps as tight as they'll go, anything you can do to make it work. (Don't forget the stuff you might have on your trailer)

Your gear will also be vulnerable to attacks from the wind coming from an unexpected direction. Now's the time to fully-close zippers, zip together two-pieces, seal visors and make sure the peaks on dual-sport helmets are on securely.

If you know you'll be riding in challenging conditions, it's also a good idea to make sure your bike and its components are all in decent condition. Pay particular attention to air pressures, as those can contribute to instability should they fall too low.

Step Two: Speed Up

You know how you can take your hands off the handlebars at highway speeds and the bike will continue to track a straight line. (Not recommended) Well, that's due to the gyroscopic force of the wheels, which make a bike "want" to stand straight up. In a crosswind, this is your greatest ally. While getting blown all over the road may make you want to slow down, you should actually maintain a decent speed in order to bring the full gyroscopic effect into the equation. Just don't go crazy, running the speed limit should work just fine.

Step Three: Minimize Your Footprint

Depending on what bike you're riding, your own body could be the largest piece of resistance the wind is encountering. Crouching down can reduce this area; if your bike has a windscreen, try to put as much of your body behind it as possible. At the very least, this will mean that the force of the wind will be acting on something closer to the bike's center of gravity rather than as far away from it as possible.

At the same time, release your death grip on the bars. If the wind is moving your upper body around, a tight grip or stiff arms could be translating that movement into steering inputs.

Step Four: Weight The Pegs

When you're upright, weighting the peg on the side of the bike facing the wind will cause it to turn somewhat in that direction. This counters the force of the wind which is trying to turn it the opposite direction. (this technique could be a discussion on its own)

Step Five: Hang Off

If the wind is blowing so hard that you need to steer into it to maintain a straight line, then hanging off will have the same effect it does while you're rounding a corner — making for less steering input and less lean. This method is particularly effective while crouching down in some approximation of sport bike body position (a little challenging on a dual-sport), reducing your aerodynamic footprint and countering the force of the wind with your body weight.

Using these techniques, you should be able to manage hours of riding in significant crosswinds in some approximation of safety and control. Don't take things too far though, in any inclement weather condition you'll need to use your judgment to determine if the risk is outweighing the progress. Pull over if conditions get too dangerous.

Ride Safe – Have Fun

Dinner Ride

by Bob King
A Great Member

The May dinner ride was a success! I had 10 Chapter L members make it this month. I had planned to eat at Stuebens but they had a waiting list that was way past our bed time so I had to go to a backup plan. We went to Wishbone instead! Their food is very good and it always hits the spot. They give you enough food for a meal the next day so I don't think anyone left hungry.

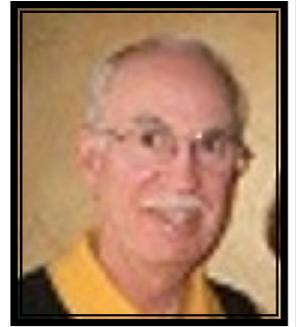

As with any event there is always good and bad news. The bad news is the dinner ride money pot is empty. The good news is Linda won the money. It was a nice prize for her since she has been under the weather. So now it is time to start to build up a new one so please come to the dinner rides and enjoy the company!

Kicking the Bucket!by Nick HoppnerDistrict Motorist Awareness

No, this article is not about death and dying. At least not intentionally. After you've read it, you decide.

Early this month, I traded in my eight-year-old Toyota RAV4 on a brand new RAV4 Hybrid. Very fancy—I still haven't figured out the "infotainment/navigation" system. Anyway, both Ginny and I were basking in the luxury of our new vehicle which still hadn't been through a rainstorm, let alone a car wash, when we headed "over the hill" to Denver for a GWRRA event. Having a bit of time at our disposal, we met a friend for lunch on the southwest side of town, then accepted her invitation to buzz on over to her apartment in Aurora on the southwest side of the Denver metroplex.

We hopped on Hampden Boulevard (US 285) eastbound and soon were caught up in the flow of three parallel lanes of traffic, all hurtling downhill at supra-legal rates of speed. Our shiny new RAV was in the furthestmost left lane as we rapidly descended toward Federal Boulevard and the South Platte River valley. To our left, maybe 10 feet away, was a blur of gray concrete Jersey barrier. To our right, a cluster of vehicles drafting each other and us like NASCAR contenders. Trying to establish a car-length's safety cushion was futile; quick little German and Japanese cars swooped in and out, seeking a two-second advantage over their competition.

Then it happened. Time—as I perceived it—slowed w-a-a-a-ay d-o-w-n. What took place in less than a second in real time seemed to unwind before me like a slow motion movie.

From somewhere among the pack of cars and trucks ahead of and to the right of my shiny new car appeared an empty, blue, plastic paint bucket, upright and spinning like a ballerina on toe shoes. The bucket spun gyroscopically across my lane as if guided by the choreography of Swan Lake. Then, for no apparent reason, it continued to spin, but reversed its course. I knew in an instant that the ballerina bucket was on its way back into my lane. I also knew there would be no way to avoid the inevitable collision.

I didn't brake. I didn't swerve. I nailed that blue bucket with my left front wheel and my left rear wheel. BLAM—BLAM! I glanced in my rear view mirror and, with an ounce of satisfaction, saw a now flattened bucket skimming like a Frisbee across the lane where it joined the other detritus against the concrete barrier. But satisfaction immediately faded into concern. "What's the damage?" I groaned.

Outside our friend's apartment building, I noticed bent plastic bordering both wheel wells. No major scuff marks; no bent steel or broken lenses. No misaligned steering. But "the new" was gone from my new car. (Sigh...)

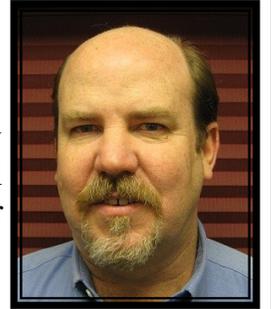

Odd Sunday!

Stan Smetana

Another Great Member

It was Sunday, May 15th; somehow the sun had risen quietly behind the heavy low clouds. It was an odd day in beautiful Colorado. I layered against the cool moistness of the day, loaded the electrics in the saddlebag, picked-up a co-rider and headed for a warm breakfast.

The gloomy day seemed to brighten a little as a small parade of riders arrived at Denny's (Union @ 6th). Chuck, Janet, Randall, Linda, Fred... and then like an irradiated Lima bean, breaking the gray of the day, came Ralph in a beautiful 4-wheeler that I'm certain we'll all become more familiar with over time. Perhaps only as a sharp contrast to Ralph's bright new vehicle, my wing stood alone in the lot, bracing against the morning's chill on its side-stand. Indeed, it was an Odd Sunday.

Our breakfast was a blur of laughs, jovial ribbing, and the recounting of many great times, which extended into the parking lot as 9 o'clock approached. We all had a grand tour and formal introduction to Ralph's new ride, and similar to their arrivals, each rider faded-off to attend to other priorities. My co-rider and I would ride; it was, after all, an odd Sunday.

As 9:30 neared and we were looking to get underway, Laura and Ron joined us in the lot; now we were ready to ride on this Odd Sunday. True to the nature of these "Odd Sunday" rides, we discussed possible short-routes, and headed out. Leaving the Denny's, we headed west on US-40 uphill into the low-hanging clouds for a quiet ride.

After an hour and a half, we were chatting again, this time at the Seven-11 on CO-93 at the north edge of suburban Golden. We had ridden the wooded and calming path of US-40 through to the Central City Parkway, visited Central City and Black Hawk, before following CO-119 to Golden Gate Canyon. Almost as an endorsement of the concept of the Odd Sunday casual ride concept, the weather along the ride was quite enjoyable with temperatures in upper Golden Gate through Crawford Gulch were more than 10 degrees warmer than the temps in Golden and Lakewood.

This was an Odd Sunday ride, and we'll do it again (and again). Every Odd Sunday of every month, we'll depart the Denny's parking lot at 565 Union Blvd following some mutually agreeable ride route. If you find yourself with the keys to your bike on the first, third or fifth Sunday of any month, c'mon by the Denny's on Union at 6th Avenue with a full tank of fuel prior to our 9:30 departure time. Of course, there's breakfast beforehand if you're feeling a bit "low on fuel" yourself.

Albuquerque Balloon Fiesta

Fred Fisher

Yet Another Great Member

Have you ever seen a hot air balloon up close? How about over 700 of them in one day? If not, you might want to join us for the 2016 Albuquerque Balloon Fiesta.

We will ride down to Albuquerque on Friday, September 30th. We will then attend the Balloon Fiesta on both Saturday and Sunday, October 1-2. After the Sunday morning launch we will ride back to the Denver area.

I have a block of rooms reserved in Rio Rancho, NM and have 5 of them still available. I will take names on a first come basis so if you are interested, please contact me as soon as possible. Rooms cost $125/night for a King room and $130/night for Double Queens.

Some details: We will ride down on Rt. 285 to Santa Fe with lunch in Alamosa. On Saturday we will take a shuttle to the Fiesta field for the morning mass ascension. The rest of Saturday is yours to do as you wish. I can provide you with a LARGE list of things to do. Saturday evening we will do a group dinner (attendance not required) with the local Chapters in Albuquerque. Sunday, we will again go to the mass ascension and then back to the hotel to pack up then onto I-25 to ride home.

If you have any questions or if you want to sign up, please drop me an email at silverone@comcast.net

Keep an eye out for more training opportunities!

One fine summer’s evening, Paddy, Mick and Liam are riding back home from the bar, all three of them on Paddy’s motorcycle.

Of course, they get stopped by a cop who says to them, “This motorcycle is only licensed to carry two people, and there are three of you. One of you will have to get off and walk.”

“Three of us?” says Paddy as he turns to Mick. “Jeez, what happened to Rory and Niall?”
